

MINER MEANS MORE

STABILITY AND SUPPORT FOR OUR MILITARY VETERANS

MICHAEL LEBLANC

National Account Manager

I spent 10 years in the Navy as a sonar technician and then a recruiter before joining Miner Corporation, and my path at this supportive corporation has mirrored the one I followed in the service.

I came to Miner through a recruitment agency that works with placing service veterans in technical fields. Much like my career in the Navy, I started off on the technical side as a service technician, serving the company's customers and working with teams to get the job done right, right now. One of the things that attracted me to Miner in the first place was the myriad opportunities I saw to learn new skills and become whatever I set my mind to.

I can't say enough about the willingness of Miner's management team to mentor the people who work for them. If you're committed to working hard and putting forth the effort, Miner will train you and mentor you to continue progressing within the organization.

I would encourage any of my fellow veterans interested in advancing through the chain of command here to ask questions. Be curious. Take direction—and put forth the same effort you did when you were defending your country. You're not just a number at Miner—they will notice your energy and dedication.

Thanks to the help of many people within the organization (and my experience as a recruiter, which is similar to sales), I was able to become the first national account manager in the company's history—and I see continued growth for my career ahead. What I like most about Miner is the fact that I don't just have a job—I have a career. I would tell anyone in the military looking for stability and support on the civilian side that you couldn't find a better place to work than Miner.
